Body Elements

These topics contain examples of all the base element types (topic and highlight domains) that can occur within <body>.

Paragraph-Level Elements

This topic contains samples of all paragraph-level elements except lists, which have their own topic.

First paragraph within a topic. The relevant data on this apparition, as recorded in various logbooks, agreed pretty closely as to the structure of the object or creature in question, its unprecedented speed of movement, its startling locomotive power, and the unique vitality with which it seemed to be gifted. If it was a cetacean, it exceeded in bulk any whale previously classified by science. No naturalist, neither Cuvier nor Lacépède, neither Professor Dumeril nor Professor de Quatrefages, would have accepted the existence of such a monster sight unseen—specifically, unseen by their own scientific eyes.

A second paragraph. Striking an average of observations taken at different times— rejecting those timid estimates that gave the object a length of 200 feet, and ignoring those exaggerated views that saw it as a mile wide and three long—you could still assert that this phenomenal creature greatly exceeded the dimensions of anything then known to ichthyologists, if it existed at all.

A short paragraph.

A paragraph within an example. Now then, it did exist, this was an undeniable fact; and since the human mind dotes on objects of wonder, you can understand the worldwide excitement caused by this unearthly apparition. As for relegating it to the realm of fiction, that charge had to be dropped.

Note: A note within body with no subordinate first para. In essence, on July 20, 1866, the steamer Governor Higginson, from the Calcutta & Burnach Steam Navigation Co., encountered this moving mass five miles off the eastern shores of Australia.

Second para of note. Captain Baker at first thought he was in the presence of an unknown reef; he was even about to fix its exact position when two waterspouts shot out of this inexplicable object and sprang hissing into the air some 150 feet.

Lists

This topics contains samples of all the different kinds of base lists (ol, ul, sl, dl) in various combinations. One challenge with rendering lists in DITA is that list items are not required to contain paragraph elements, so a list item may consist of just PCDATA or PCDATA followed by paragraphs or other paragraph-level elements or may have only paragraphs.

Single-Level Lists

Simple list (cannot contain paragraph-level elements within sli):

    Simple list item 1. PCData only
    Simple list item 2. PCData only
    Simple list item 3. PCData only

Unordered list without nested paras:

- Unordered list item 1 PCDATA only.
- Unordered list item 2 PCDATA only.

    Second paragraph of unordered list item with no initial paragraph. So, unless this reef was subject to the intermittent eruptions of a geyser, the Governor Higginson had fair and honest dealings with some aquatic mammal, until then unknown, that could spurt from its blowholes waterspouts mixed with air and steam.
- Unordered list item 3 PCDATA only.

Unordered list with nested paras:

- Unordered list item 1, nested para.
- Unordered list item 2, nested para.

    Second paragraph of unordered list item with initial paragraph. Similar events were likewise observed in Pacific seas, on July 23 of the same year, by the Christopher Columbus from the West India & Pacific Steam Navigation Co.
- Unordered list item 3, nested para.

Ordered list without nested paras:

1. Ordered list item 1 PCDATA only.
2. Ordered list item 2 PCDATA only.

   Second paragraph of ordered list item with no initial paragraph. Consequently, this extraordinary cetacean could transfer itself from one locality to another with startling swiftness, since within an interval of just three days, the Governor Higginson and the Christopher Columbus had observed it at two positions on the charts separated by a distance of more than 700 nautical leagues.
3. Ordered list item 3 PCDATA only.

Ordered list with nested paras:

1. Ordered list item 1, nested para
2. Ordered list item 2, nested para

   Second paragraph of ordered list item with initial paragraph. Fifteen days later and 2,000 leagues farther, the Helvetia from the Compagnie Nationale and the Shannon from the Royal Mail line, running on opposite tacks in that part of the Atlantic lying between the United States and Europe, respectively signaled each other that the monster had been sighted in latitude 42° 15' north and longitude 60° 35' west of the meridian of Greenwich.
3. Ordered list item 3, nested para
